

In class assignment 2:

The platform I personally use is Instagram. I usually post pictures, typically recreational photography content. These include pictures of scenery, subjects, places, moments. Photography is a hobby of mine, it usually helps me explore new places I've never been, and understand more about the culture and creative aspects of everyday life. Even the most common subject can be made into a good photo when approached with some creativity and post-processing.

My audience would typically be people interested in scenic or subjective photos, these include common users of Instagram that either follow photography content, or just like to view posts in general. I sometimes use on-screen text for capturing attention to the post, as well as provide some context clues regarding the post itself (such as the place, date, weather, time, etc). I do not target a specific audience as I do not have a niche artstyle or subject to photograph.

The usual engagement is through stories and comments. I usually reply to comments made on my posts, to show that I am approachable, but also to help boost my post (more comments help boost posts and engagement on Instagram). The stories help me promote the post I make, by giving people a funnel to go directly to the post itself. It also helps attract people to go to the profile, where they may engage with other posts that they like.

Recently a photo post of a human subject in the snow storm did well. The image had a subject standing in a snowfall with a foggy background. The snow (white) helped highlight the subject. I also added some text to the photo using Photoshop to add some style and context. The post in particular did well over the span of 1 week, being the most viewed post so far.
