Day in New York City

(VHS + Grain Overlay)

Scene 1: Hudson Yards, The Vessel, and the High Line (0:03–0:20)

Visual: Walking through Hudson Yards. The vessel is framed architecturally. Cut to the High Line overlooking the city. Camera visible in hand.

Voiceover:

New York is constantly building. Constantly moving.

At Hudson Yards, everything feels ambitious — bold lines, modern design, structure reaching upward.

But just a few steps away on the High Line, the city slows down. You're above the streets, but somehow closer to the details.

Travel, to me, begins with noticing contrast.

Scene 2: Times Square at Night (0:20–0:40)

Visual: Times Square lights, moving crowds, digital billboards. Slight handheld movement to show energy.

Voiceover:

Then there's Times Square — loud, electric, unforgettable.

Most people see chaos. I see rhythm.

Every light, every screen, every face moving through the frame tells a story.

Korpo Travels started with a simple idea: if you slow down long enough, even the busiest place in the world becomes intentional.

Scene 3: Pier 35 Waterfront at Sunset (0:40–0:55)

Visual: Calm water. Skyline glowing during golden hour. Adjusting camera lens. Quiet reflective shot.

Voiceover:

And just when you think the city never rests, you find the water.

The skyline softens. The noise fades.

And suddenly, New York feels personal.

Closing Shot: Sunset Reflection (0:55–1:00)

Visual: Reviewing photos. Subtle smile. Sun setting behind skyline.

Voiceover:

Korpo Travels isn't about checking cities off a list.

It's about seeing them differently.

One place. One perspective. One moment at a time.
